Dear Debbie,
During the eight years I worked with Elie Wiesel in establishing his archive at Boston University, I heard much about you, and always in terms of praise and admiration.
You were the student of Professor Elie Wiesel during his first year of teaching at Boston University, and thirty six years later he still considered you the best student he ever had. He felt privileged that you took both of the courses he taught that year. Wiesel's pride in having you as a student, and its significance to him, were truly extraordinary based on my experience in academia.

Congratulations
Joel Rappel
